

You could be earning 152% to 313% more revenue.
Your shop is turning customers away at every step,
from the Google result to the payment screen.

Problems

The things that lose you customers

Most never reach your cart. They cannot find the comic, or the page is too slow. Below are the ten things sending them away and what each is worth.

1. Missing payment options

+6.6% to 21% revenue

You take only PayPal and bank transfer, so card, Apple Pay and Google Pay customers cannot buy. In Europe 48 out of 100 online payments are by card. We'd add a payment gateway that takes them all.

Of every 100 people who fill a cart on your shop, 6 leave because there is no way to pay that they use.

Based on European Central Bank, 50,000 people asked how they pay online · Baymard Institute, the average of 50 studies and ten years of checkout testing

2. Shipping is set up wrong

+21% to 68% revenue

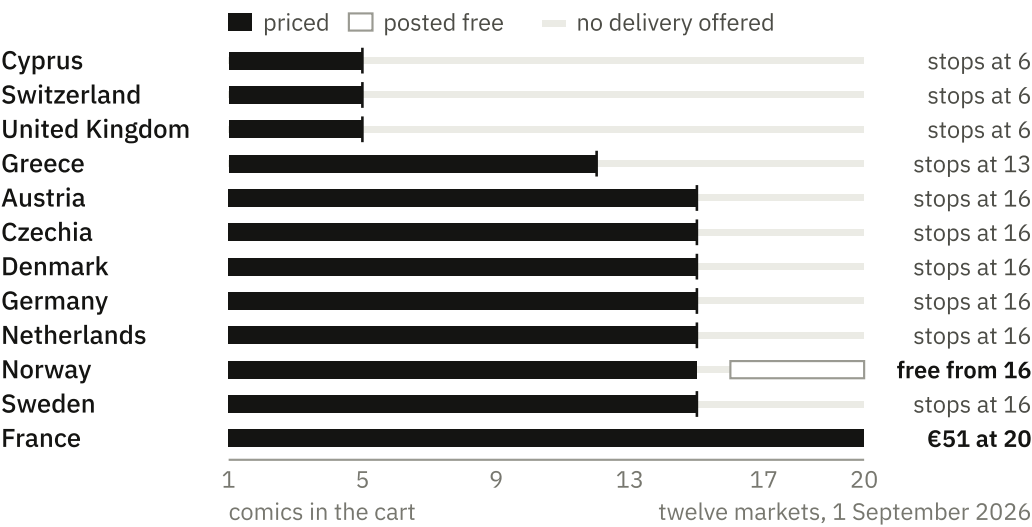

Your shop hides shipping until the last screen, after the address is typed. Late costs are the first reason people abandon a cart, and 40 of every 100 who leave say so. Your shipping table also has gaps. You cannot ship an order over 15 comics to Germany at all. We'd price delivery before anybody types an address, from the country they order from and the weight of the cart.

Of every 100 people who fill a cart, 20 leave because the total arrived too late, or because the checkout refused them.

Based on Baymard Institute, the average of 50 studies and ten years of checkout testing

Where delivery stops

The same comic added one copy at a time, twelve markets asked at every step. What stops it is weight, so a cart of lighter comics reaches further.

Ten of the twelve countries stop, and every time the shop says the problem is the address. Norway gets free shipping on the cart Germany cannot have at all.

3. Pages load slowly

+44% revenue

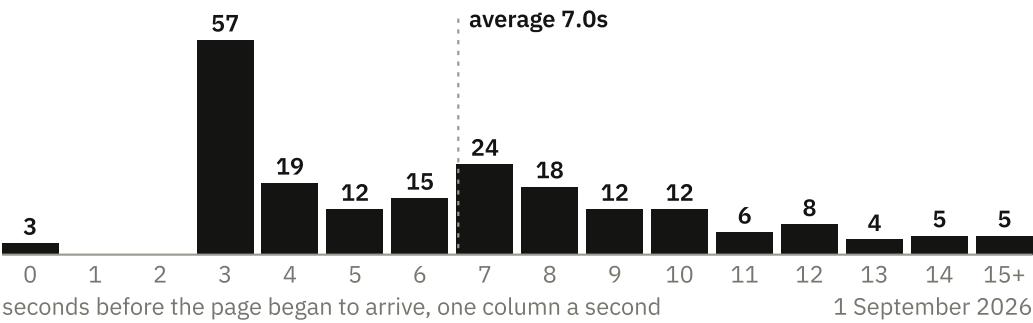

Your pages take 7.0 seconds to open, against 0.7 on the 12 shops beside you. 40 of the 200 took more than ten. A 1-second shop sells 1.5 times a 10-second one. We'd build every page once and keep it ready.

A customer waits 7.0 seconds for a page to begin arriving, and 40 of the 200 we opened took more than ten.

Based on Portent, 100 million page views on 20 shops · Google and Deloitte, Milliseconds Make Millions, shops on phones across Europe and the US

200 comic pages we picked at random, asked once each.

Your average load time is 7.0 seconds. Only 3 came back in under a second, and 40 took more than ten.

You against your competitors

2,600 comic pages, 200 a shop, each one picked at random.

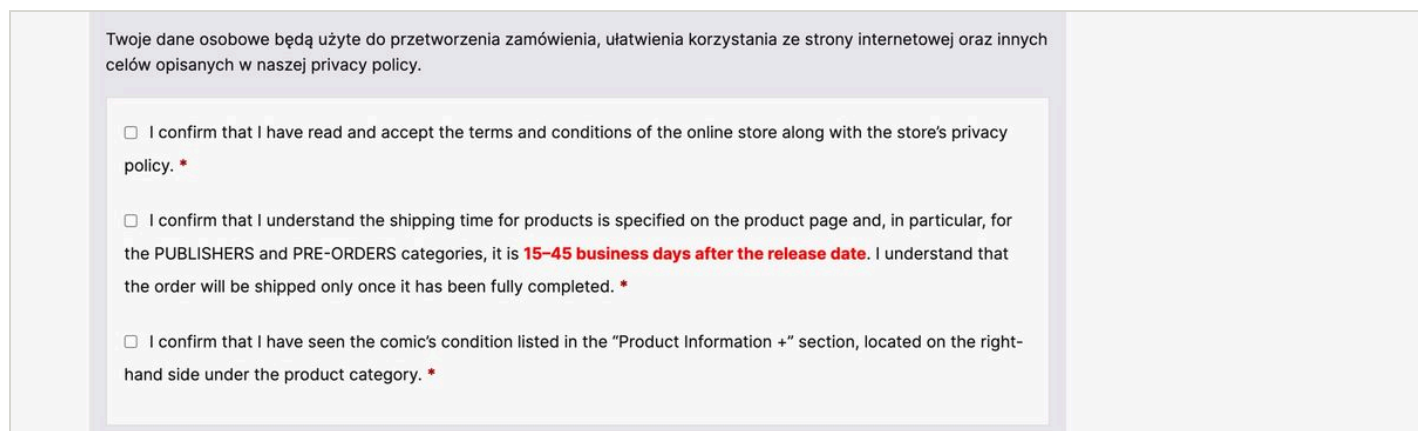

4. Your checkout asks for three confirmations

+12% to 40% revenue

Your checkout asks for three ticks and the address twice before it will take any money. One tick is a wait of 15 to 45 business days. Of every 100 who leave a cart, 17 say the checkout was too long. We'd cut it to one tick and move the wait to the product page.

Of every 100 people who fill a cart, 12 leave because the checkout asked more than they were willing to give.

Based on Baymard Institute, the average of 50 studies and ten years of checkout testing

5. Not built for phones

not counted

Your shop was built for desktop, and 47 out of 100 visits in Europe are on a phone. Half of the first screen is your menu, and the page is wider than the phone, so it slides sideways. On a comic page the price and Add to cart are below the first screen. We'd design a proper phone version that scales properly and is built for swipes, not clicks.

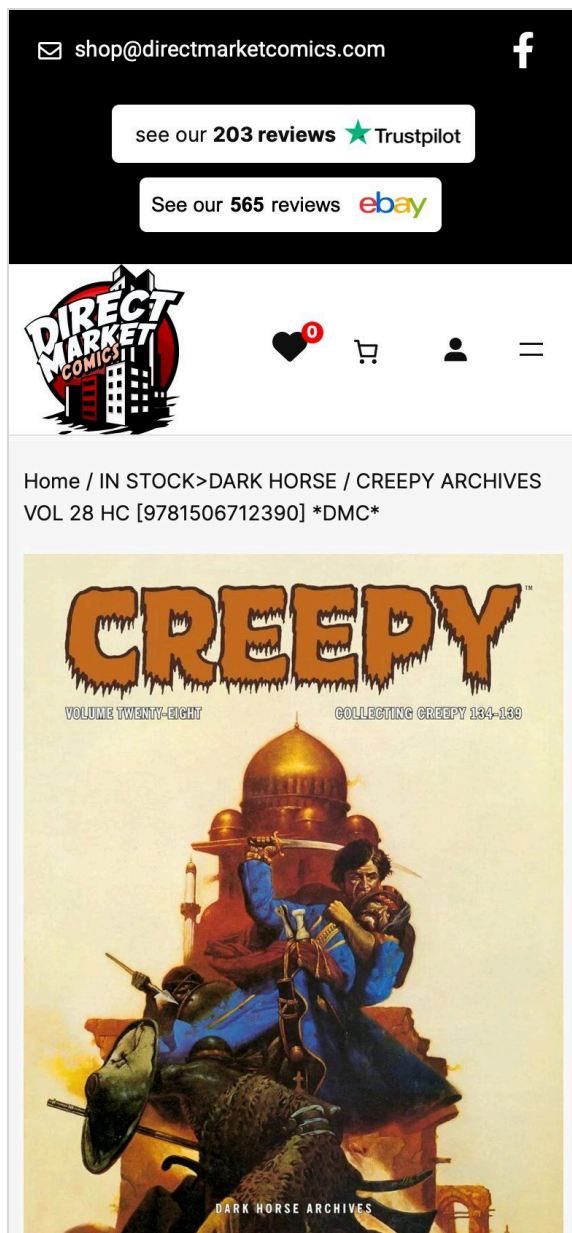

47 of every 100 visits in Europe are on a phone, and yours was built for a desktop. Nobody has priced a page laid out like this, so it is in no figure above.

6. Your reviews are not on your shop

not counted

You have 238 reviews at 4.9/5 on Trustpilot and a badge in your header. No comic carries a rating, though five ratings sell a comic 270% more often. Of every 100 who leave, 19 did not trust the shop with their card. We'd put a rating on every comic, taken from Comic Vine or another supplier.

Of every 100 people who fill a cart, 19 leave without trusting the shop with their card. Nobody has measured how many a review would keep, so it is in no figure above.

7. Pages not built for Google

+25% clicks from Google

Your titles carry an ISBN number. Google can print a price and In stock under a result; not one of the 4,997 pages we picked at random does, in any form. 6,147 pages repeat comics you already list. Pages that give Google that data got 25% more clicks. We'd clean the titles, give Google price and stock, and merge duplicates.

Not one of the 4,997 comic pages we read gives Google a price or a stock state in a form it reads. Ten of the 12 shops beside you do.

Your search box was never set up for comics. Type spiderman and it finds nothing, but spider-man returns 461 comics. Kodansha finds nothing either, though you hold 43 pages of it. We'd make search forgive hyphens and punctuation, and know your publishers' names.

11 in every 100 comics you hold sit behind a publisher name your own search box cannot find. Nobody has counted how many of your own visitors search, so it is in no figure above.

9. No pages for what people search for

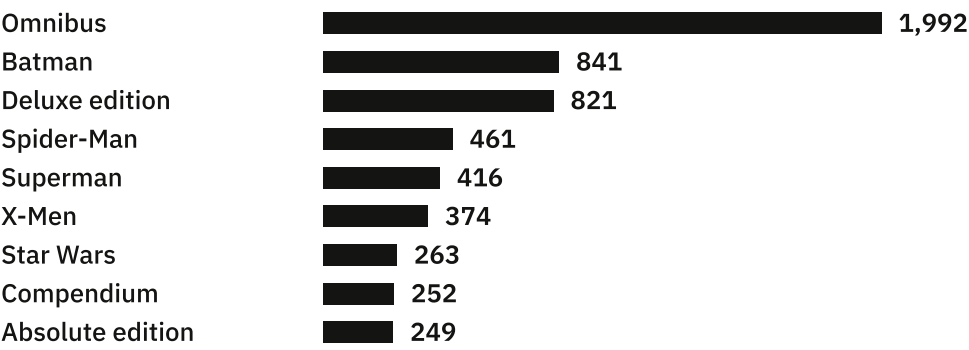

not counted

Your 307 category pages are all publishers, a stock state or a sale. Most people do not google in stock Marvel, they google batman omnibus or x-men. You have no page for a character, a series or a format, and Marvel is filed eight times. We'd add pages for the words people actually search for, and merge the duplicate categories.

3,382 comics sit behind nine words your buyers type into Google, and not one of the nine has a page on your shop. Nobody has priced that, so it is in no figure above.

10. No analytics

not counted

Your shop counts your orders and nothing about anybody who does not buy. Nothing on it records a visit, a cart abandoned, or the checkout step that caused it. Your Facebook pixel plugin has no pixel ever set in it, so it records nothing anywhere. We'd install PostHog and track every step that matters.

Not one visit, cart or checkout step on your shop is counted. Nobody can put a figure on what that costs until it is fixed, so it is in no figure above.

What your shop cannot tell you today

- How many people visit each month.
- Which page they arrive on, and which page they leave from.
- How many people abandon the cart or the checkout.
- Which step loses the most customers.
- How people behave on the site.

That is 10. We found another 47. Ask and we will send the list.
